

A LIFE OF GRIME

Being a builder is no picnic. Working in a very messy trade, it can be tough keeping everything clean and muck-free with carpets, walls, fancy floors and fireplaces to work around.

We've all been there... a simple job like sealing a window frame with PU expanding foam can turn in to a very messy business when it goes where it shouldn't! It can be a nightmare when the foam comes out that little bit too quickly – and spreading it with your hands, a towel or a spatula only makes it worse. Foam splatters can mean a right headache – not to mention a tidy pay-out to cover your excess to put any disasters right. Excess costs can easily be anything from £80 – £200 for every accident, depending on your own trade insurance provider. When cash is tight and there is no room for extra unforeseen spend, anything to help you reduce your snagging costs at the end of a big job are sure to be a bonus. It can be a nightmare cleaning up spills and smears when they have been left for days – with a simple stain sometimes leading to a whole flooring section needing to be replaced with cash from your pocket! By keeping everything muck-free as you go along there's less of a chance of these snagging nightmares, and leaving your site clean and tidy every day is sure to be a winner with your customer, meaning great reviews and recommendations for future work.

Grime fighters

And on keeping smart and tidy, with more builders and construction workers now ditching their holey t-shirts and dirty jeans and investing in professional and expensive workwear, many of us are no longer using our pricey tops and trousers to wipe muck and grime off our hands and need something else to do the job instead. When going to quote another job after a day's graft, being able to clean yourself and your gear up quickly is also sure to make a good first impression for new potential customers.

So, how about spending less than a tenner to avoid paying thousands in excess
